WISCONSIN RAPIDS DAILY TRIBUNE

FIFTH YEAR NO. 2165. WISCONSIN RAPIDS, WISCONSIN, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 11, 1920. PRICE THREE CENTS

DEFINE U. S. POSITION REGARDING POLAND

POLES PREPARE TO RESIST THE SOVIET ARMIES

AMERICAN POSITION IN RESPECT TO POLAND IS DEFINED IN SECRETARY COLBY'S NOTE TODAY.

(By Associated Press)

Warsaw—The concentration and regrouping of the Polish forces for an extensive counter-strike on the entire Warsaw front is reported by today's newspapers.

Paris—The Russians are now occupying a stretch of twenty-four miles on the direct railway line between Warsaw and Danzig and a large force is pushing across the Danzig corridor to cut the remaining railroad, according to the French officials today.

The section of the main line held by the Russians is between Ciechanow and Mlawa.

The French Government has decided to recognize General Barron Peter Wrangel as head of the defacto government of southern Russia. In making this announcement the minister of foreign office said this recognition applied rendering General Wrangel all possible military assistance.

Americas Position Clear.

Washington, D. C.—The position of the American Government on the Polish situation is today before the world.

Stated briefly, the United States stands as favoring preservation of the political independence and territorial integrity of Poland, and as opposing any dismemberment of Russia.

The outline of this policy was set forth in a note dispatched yesterday by Secretary Colby to the Italian Ambassador.

Poland Autonomous State.

To the end that Poland shall continue as an autonomous state, the American Government, Secretary Colby declared in his note, will follow the policy "directed to the employment of all available means to render it effectual."

To safeguard the interests of the Russian people discontinued from the existing Russian-Soviet regime, the United States Government through the note, declared to the allied and associated powers it would regard with satisfaction the declaration by them of respect for the territorial integrity and true frontiers of Russia.

No General Conference.

The United States, the note asserts, takes no exception to the efforts to arrange an armistice between Poland and Russia but for the present, at least, cannot consent to any plan to divert such armistice negotiations into the general European conference.

In discussing the situation resulting from the sweep of the Soviet armies into Poland, Secretary Colby takes occasion to reiterate the previously expressed sympathy of the American Government for the Russian people, as well as the government previously announced decision not to recognize the Soviet regime which is characterized as non-representative Government whose only policy is brutal force.

The state department officials refused to elaborate any explanation on the phrase contained in the note to employ all available means to hold territorial integrity of Poland.

While the United States and the allies apparently are in accord as to the future of Poland, a divergence of views as to Russia were sufficiently marked as to cause comment.

THOUGHTLESS USE OF FIRE IN WOODS COSTS MILLIONS FIRE LOSS

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE CAUTIONS CAMPERS AND TOBACCO SMOKERS AGAINST STARTING FOREST FIRES—BIG BLAZES MANY TIMES RESULT IN LOSS OF LIFE

More than $25,000,000 worth of standing timber in the United States is destroyed by forest fires each year, according to estimates made by the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture. This represents a serious loss to the country, particularly at present when the Nation is using up its resources of timber four times as fast as it is grown, and as a consequence is facing a depletion of its forests.

Not every one in the country will be able to visit the display of the Forest Service, which, as a part of the department's exhibit, is to be on show at various fairs throughout the country during the next few months. The lessons of the exhibit, however, should appeal strongly to everyone, as they point out graphically the more common ways by which destructive forest fires are started through carelessness. They are part of the work of the service in its endeavor to stir up nation-wide sentiment for a cautious use of fire in forests and woodlands.

Tobacco Smoking Hazardous

Tobacco smoking in the forests has been found to be a very serious fire hazard. Smokers, statistics show, are annually responsible for a large number of conflagrations in timbered areas, causing immense losses. So important has this source of forest fires been considered by those interested in guarding the timber supply of the country, that Secretary of Agriculture, Meredith, recently appealed to the tobacco manufacturers to co-operate in enlisting smokers in a movement against careless use of fire in all forests, both national and private. It is his idea to have the manufacturers print a fire caution on the outside of each tobacco, cigar, and cigarette container. Hundreds of thousands of people would read these cautions and their effect would be very valuable, he believes. Similar action has been taken by a Canadian tobacco company as a step toward safe-guarding the timber resources of the Dominion. Some lumber companies in the United States do not allow their employees to smoke in the woods, and the extension of this rule is being strongly urged.

The Forest Service is endeavoring to impress upon the public the danger that results from dropping a lighted match, a pipe coal, or a lighted cigarette or cigar stump in or near a wood. Hunters, fishermen, and woods workers of all kinds smoke in the forests, and automobilists carelessly toss bits of fire from their cars and speed thoughtlessly onward, unmindful of the possible source of

ALL TO MASK AT THE MARDI GRAS SAY THE ELKS

WILL AWARD PRIZES TO THE BEST DRESSED COUPLES SATURDAY NIGHT—TO HAVE PAVEMENT DANCE.

Plans for Mardi Gras Night at the carnival are shaping themselves now according to Frank D. Abel, executive chairman of the carnival. Mr. Abel asks that all Wisconsin Rapids people appear in masks at the carnival on Saturday night at the time the queen is crowned. All people are asked to wear costumes and masks as well. Confetti, streamers and other effects will make the Mardi Gras one big whirl of fun and excitement, which is to be followed by a pavement dance near the carnival grounds and in front of the library.

Offer Prizes.

Mr. Abel announced that cash prizes totaling thirty dollars will be awarded to those appearing in the best costumes. The lady with the best costume and the man with the best costume and also the couple with the best costume will be judged for the prizes to be awarded that night. The contestants for costume will be asked to form in line to march inside of the enclosure to be set off for the pavement dancing. The judges will then decide.

Will Be Whirlwind.

Members of the executive committee announced that the event would be a whirlwind finish and would be the best and most thrilling public event in the history of the city. The success of Mardi Gras night depends upon the largest number of people who possibly can to appear in fancy dress costume and in mask as well said a member of the committee. Further announcements will be made later according to Mr. Abel.

Louis Panter, a member of the police force of this city, was nearly drowned this morning, when the boat from which he and Ed Turbin, also of this city, were fishing, capsized near the resort belonging to Peter Wolf, near New Rome.

Mr. Turbin was also thrown into the water and mud, but managed to catch hold of the boat and was picked up a few minutes later by Mr. Wolf.

Many Votes Cast

The interest in the balloting to elect the Queen of the Carnival, for Mardi Gras night, is growing rapidly as is evidenced by the vote cast last night. Several of the popular young ladies nominated for the honor, have big gains in votes, as the result of last night's contest. It is thought however, in spite of the increased number of votes cast last night over Monday night, that some are still holding out large numbers of votes, and expect to rush them in during the closing hours of the balloting Friday night.

New Attractions

A large number of people attended the carnival again last evening, and a large number of Nekoosa and Port Edwards people enjoyed the evening set aside in their honor. The carnival has several new attractions in the form of new shows, and lively interest is being taken in the numerous wheels of fortune which are on the carnival grounds. A record for attendance is being set, and the carnival committee is well pleased with the results of the work so far. Tonight there will be a prize of $5.00 offered at the stand to the man with the biggest feet.

DRAINAGE SETTLEMENT REGULATED BY COURT

COURT RENDERS DECISION IN THE ELM LAKE CRANBERRY CASE

Settlement in the case of the Cranberry Creek Drainage District vs. Elm Lake Cranberry Co., and others, the case arising out of the disposal of the waters diverted from Hemlock creek by the Cranberry Co., was reached this week, when the Cicuit Court, Judge B. B. Park presiding, rendered decision.

According to the findings, the Cranberry Co. will still be allowed to take water from Hemlock Creek, and will be allowed to turn an equal quantity of water back into Hemlock creek north of the Drainage district. This will necessitate metering of the water, taken in and turned out from the cranberry marsh. The entire adjustment and settlement of the case will be under the direct supervision of the Court, who will have power to modify his decision, as conditions make such changes necessary.

TUESDAY WAS HOTTEST DAY SINCE JUNE 13th

FORECASTS UNSETTLED WEATHER AND LOCAL SHOWERS

Indications are for partly cloudy and unsettled weather, reports Geo. T. Nixon, who adds that local showers are possible. Temperature changes will be slight except that cooler weather will overspread the northwest as far east as Lake Superior; that is, temperatures will be lower in the region of precipitation.

The principal feature on the weather charts, says Mr. Nixon, is an area of low pressure in the northwest which has caused rain in the Dakotas and adjacent territory. Showers prevailed over all sections east of the Rockies. In Wisconsin, however, the rainfall has not been sufficient to relieve the drought.

The highest temperature yesterday was 95 degrees, the lowest 61 degrees. Yesterday is reported as being the hottest day since June 13. Mercury has been above ninety degrees only ten times during the present summer.

The sun rose at 5:01 a. m. yesterday and set at 7:10 p. m.

The Myestery Woman in her latest communique states that she wished the chase for her was as hot as the weather and the local people were giving her a cool shoulder all the time. Here is her latest item:

"Dear Everyone":

"If you think I enjoy being pushed around in the big carnival crowd without any attention guess again cause I don't and I only wish that the chase would be as hot as the weather is getting to be.

"Last night at the carnival, I talked to a lot of people and they would not have a whole lot to do with me. You are all cruel. Sad oh me, oh my. I talked with Frank Abel over the phone and even he does not know who I am. He says he has received the twenty dollars all right and is holding it for someone if they only would get busy to locate me. I shall be there on the job at the Carnival to get caught. Now is your chance.

"I talked with twelve people and they all gave me the cold shoulder. Please pardon me for being familiar with you but I am ever.

"Mysteriously yours,"
"Xie."

BRINGING INDUSTRIES HERE.

Criticism has been aimed at various times at the local Chamber of Commerce and business interests here regarding the lack of enthusiasm, which it is claimed that local people regard prospective interests locating in this city. There is much which can be said of this question which would interest the reader and probably enlighten the average person who does not come in contact with the various visitors who go from one city to another seeking locations, sites and many bonuses of varied amounts.

Some of the propositions which manufacturing people put up to a city and its business men are almost ludicrous. Some of them are sound and fair perhaps while a great many of them seek everything from the city in which they seek to locate. In the case of the Sampson and other industries locating in neighboring cities, the capital of those companies have been used exclusively and no bonuses have been asked which would likely embarrass the community in which they intended to locate.

Several business men have stated in public gatherings that local interests have prevented factories and plants from locating here. This argument has been refuted by other local men.

We are all anxious for more industrial development here but we want bonafide industries to seek location here. We should by all means encourage new industry and furthermore encourage and support local industry to expand wherever possible. This is being done in several instances in the city. It is not wise to entertain any business propositions that are not consistent with good business judgment. Many of the proposed new industries are of untried nature and do not have any backing whatever. Men who seek to try out their patent devices with local money are not welcomed here while those of good business qualities will be supported by local capital and local interests without much hesitation, we believe.

Speaker's Sore Throat.

"Clergyman's sore throat" is, according to Dr. John J. Ledberg of New York, due to an incorrect method of breathing, which causes the speaker or singer to use his muscles incorrectly and thus overtax the throat. The proper way to breathe is to use the diaphragm and the lower ribs, keeping the upper chest full of air.

AMERICANISM

Among the five absolute rights of every American, the right of personal liberty, of freedom of religion, of freedom of speech, and the right of personal property, the last is most frequently abused in theory and in practice. Yet it is a fundamental right and a cornerstone of American life. We do not now require a test of any qualification for voting and we are ready to [illegible] that human rights are greater than property rights.

Our American government office more than any other place is to secure property. The state provides laws to bound down education and incapacity. It offers through these laws all a chance to acquire all the information and training that an individual can assimilate.

Through laws to protect from disease and accident it prevents the exploitation of the weak by the strong. It makes it possible for all to make contracts, to hold property, to trade, and to lay the foundation of economic independence.

And yet above this right of private property is the public right which we find asserted in four different ways. They assert that rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitation in their enjoyment as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law as the legislature under the government and controlling power vested in them by the constitution may think necessary and expedient.

The four powers referred to are taxation, of taking private property for public use, of property affected with a public interest, and the police power.

conflagration they have left behind them. A single glowing cigarette end may cost the Government thousands of dollars for fire fighting, to say nothing of the value of the timber destroyed, the desolation of scenic beauty, and the harm done to watersheds. In protecting the national forests of more than 150,000,000 acres, the Department of Agriculture has to fight thousands of forest fires every summer due to carelessness.

There are several other important sources of forest fire which can be laid to the careless use of fire by individuals. Campers many times leave their camp fires lighted and unprotected while they fish or hunt. Camp sites frequently are abandoned and the fire not extinguished. Here is a very real danger, for there are many ways in which the fire can spread to the surrounding underbrush and make its way to the trees. A wind may spread the sparks to the timber near by.

Farmers many times are responsible for starting destructive forest fires. Great care should be exercised in brush burning during dry seasons. The fire is apt to get beyond control and the blaze spread to adjoining woods. It has been found, too, that frequently sparks from locomotives fall in or near woods, set fire to the underbrush and before long the trees are ablaze.

Often Results in Loss of Life

Records of forest fires in the United States show that there are many other features about them to be dreaded, even aside from the actual money loss of the timber burned. Not infrequently they are attended by a large loss of life. Particularly in the North and Northwest, when a fire gets beyond control large towns that happen to be in the path of the blaze may suffer severely and many persons are sometimes killed.

Governors of western states are doing much to awake individuals to a sense of personal responsibility in guarding against careless use of fire in forests. "Forest protection week" set aside for this purpose has started a movement that promises to become nation-wide.

Webster —Man's Man

By PETER B. KYNE

Author of "Cappy Ricks," "The Valley of the Giants," etc.

(Copyright, by Peter B. Kyne)

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—John Stuart Webster, mining-engineer, after cleaning up a fortune in Death Valley, Calif., boards a train for the East. He befriends a young lady annoyed by a masher, thoroughly trouncing the "pest."

CHAPTER II.—At Denver Webster receives a letter from Billy Geary, his closest friend. Geary urges him to come to Sobrante, Central America, to finance and develop a mining claim. He decides to go.

CHAPTER III.—Dolores Ruey, the young woman Webster befriended, and who has made a deep impression on him, as he has on her, is also on the way to Sobrante.

CHAPTER IV.—At Buenaventura, capital of Sobrante, Billy Geary, ill and penniless, is living on the charity of "Mother Jenks," keeper of a dramshop. She receives a cablegram from Dolores, telling of her coming.

CHAPTER V.—Dolores' father, Ricardo Ruey, president of Sobrante, had been killed in a revolution led by Sarros, the present executive. Dolores, a child of eight, was smuggled out of the country by Mother Jenks and supported by her in the United States. The old woman, ashamed of her occupation and habits of life, fears to meet Dolores, and sends Geary to the boat to say she has gone to the United States.

CHAPTER VI.—Webster, on his way to Sobrante, is taken ill on the train, and is in a hospital at New Orleans two weeks. Geary bungles his mission, Dolores easily seeing through his story. She greets Mother Jenks as her friend and benefactor. Geary falls desperately in love with the girl.

CHAPTER VII.—At New Orleans, while waiting for the steamer to Buenaventura, Webster saves the life of a young man who is attacked by two assassins. The youth leaves Webster without disclosing his identity.

CHAPTER VIII.—On the steamer Webster finds his stateroom occupied by a stranger who declares his intention of being his guest to Buenaventura. At first angered, Webster and the stranger, after a somewhat forcible argument, reach an amicable agreement. Webster recognizes him as the youth whose life he had saved the day before, though the other does not know Webster.

CHAPTER IX.—Arriving at Sobrante, Geary welcomes Webster and is instrumental in helping his friend's "guest" ashore. The latter is known to Webster as "Andrew Bowers." Geary houses him at Mother Jenks'. Webster gets the idea that Geary and Dolores are in love, and with the intention of giving Geary every chance he smilingly contradicts the girl's statement that they have met before.

CHAPTER X.

Dolores had been gone an hour before Webster roused from his bitter introspection sufficiently to glance at his watch. "Hum-m-m!" he grunted disapprovingly.

"Oh, I've been here fully half an hour," Dolores' voice assured him. He turned guiltily and found her leaning against the jamb in a doorway behind him and farther down the veranda. She was gazing at him with that calm, impersonal yet vitally interested glance that had so captivated him the first time he saw her. "Are you quite finished talking to yourself and fighting imaginary enemies? If so, you might talk to me for a change; I'll even disagree with you on any subject, if opposition will make you any happier."

He rose and indicated the chair. "Please sit down, Miss Ruey. You are altogether disconcerting—too confoundedly smart. I fear I'm going to be afraid of you until I know you better."

She shrugged adorably and took the proffered chair. "That's the Latin in her—that shrug," Webster thought. "I wonder what other mixtures go to make up that perfect whole."

Aloud he said: "So you wanted to study me in repose? Why waste your time? I am never in repose."

"Feminine curiosity, Mr. Webster. Billy has talked so much of you that I wanted to see if you measured up to the specifications. Just let me have your hand, and I'll tell you all about yourself."

"Is there any charge?"

"Yes, a nominal one. However, I guarantee a truthful reading; if, when I am through, you are not wholly satisfied, you do not have to pay the price. Is that a satisfactory arrangement?"

"Right as a fox," he declared; and held out his great calloused hand. He thrilled as she took it in both of hers, so soft and beautiful, and flattened it out, palm upward, on her knee. "A fine, large, useful hand," she commented musingly. "The callouses indicate recent hard manual toil with a pick and shovel; despite your recent efforts with soap and brush and pumice-stone, there still remain evidence of some foreign matter ingrained in those callous spots. This line indicates that you are very brave, gentle, and courteous. You are quick and firm in your decisions, but not always right, because your actions are governed by your heart instead of your head. Once you have made a decision, you are reckless of the consequences. Your lifeline tells me you are close to fifty-three years of age—"

"Scoress, you're shooting high and to the right," he interrupted, for he did not relish that jab about his age. "I'll have you know I was forty years old last month, and that I can still do a hundred yards in twelve seconds flat—in my working clothes."

"Well, don't feel peeved about it, Mr. Webster. I am not infallible; the best you can hope for from me is a high percentage of hits, even if I did shoot high and to the right that time. In point of worldly experience you're a hundred and six years old but I lopped off fifty per cent. to be on the safe side. To continue. You are of an extremely chivalrous nature—particularly toward young ladies traveling without chaperons; you are kind, affectionate, generous to a fault, something of a spendthrift. One may safely depend upon you to do the unexpected. Your matrimonial line is unbroken, proving you have never married, although right here the line is somewhat dim and frayed." She looked up at him suddenly. "You haven't been in love, have you?" she queried with childlike insouciance. "In love—and disappointed?"

He nodded, for he could not trust himself to speak.

"How sad!" she cooed sympathetically. "Did she marry another, or did she die?"

"She—she—yes, she died."

"Cauliflower tongue, in all probability, carried her off poor thing! However, to your fortune: You are naturally truthful and would not make a deliberate misstatement of fact unless you had a very potent reason for it. You have a strong sense of sportsmanship, and when fairly defeated, whether in a battle of fists or a battle of wits, you never hold a grudge, which is one of the very nicest characteristics a man can have—"

"Or a woman," he suggested feebly.

"Quite right. Few women have a sense of sportsmanship. You stand a very good chance of becoming a millionaire in Sobrante, but you must beware of a dark man who has crossed your path—"

"Which one?" Webster queried mirthfully. "All coons look alike to me—Greasers also."

"Mere patter of our profession, Mr. Webster," she admitted, "tossed in to build up the mystery element and simulate wisdom. Fortune awaited you in the United States, but you put it behind you, at the call of friendship, for a fortune in Sobrante. Now you have reconsidered that foolish action and at this moment you are contemplating sending a cablegram to a fat old man who waddles when he walks, recalling your decision not to accept a certain proposition of a business nature. However, you are too late. The fat old man with the waddle has made other arrangements, and if you want to make money, you'll remain in Sobrante. I think that is all, Mr. Webster."

He was gazing at her with an expression composed of equal parts of awe, amazement, consternation, adoration, and blank stupidity.

"Well," she queried innocently, "to quote Billy's colloquial style: did I put it over?"

"Did I Put It Over?"

"You did very well for an amateur, but I'm a doubting Thomas. About this fat old man who waddles when he walks: a really topnotch palmist could tell me his name."

"Well, I'm only an amateur, but still I think I might, to quote Billy again, make a stab at it. Do you care to bet me about ten dollars I cannot give you the fat party's initials—all three of them?"

He gazed at her owlishly. She was the most perfectly amazing girl he had ever met; he was certain she would win the ten dollars from him, but then it was worth ten dollars to know for a certainty whether she was perfect or possessed of a slight flaw; so he silently drew forth a wallet that would have choked a cow and skinned off a ten-dollar gold certificate of the United States of America.

"I'm game," he mumbled.

"The fat gentleman's initials are E. P. J."

"By the twelve apostles, Peter, Simon—"

"Don't blaspheme, Mr. Webster."

He stood up and shook himself. "When you order the tea," he said very distinctly, "please have mine cold. I need a bracer after that. Take the ten. You've won it."

"Thanks, ever so much," she answered in a matter-of-fact tone, and tucked the bill inside her shirtwaist. "I am a very poor woman, and—'Every little bit added to what you've got makes just a little bit more,'" she caroled, swaying her lithe, beautiful body and snapping her fingers like a cabaret dancer.

He could have groaned with the futility of his overwhelming desire for her; it even occurred to him what a shame it was to waste a marvel like her on a callow young pup like Billy, who had fought so many deadly skirmishes with Dan Cupid that a post-impressionistic painting of the Geary heart must resemble a pincushion. Then he remembered that this was an ungenerous, a traitorous thought, and that he had not paid the lady her fee.

"Well, what's the tariff?" he asked.

"You really feel that I have earned a professional's fee?"

"Beyond a doubt."

"Since you have taken Billy away from me this evening, I shall make you take Billy's place this evening. After dinner you shall hire an open victoria with two little white horses and drive me around the Malecon. There is a band concert to-night."

"If it's the last act of my wicked life!" he promised fervently. Strange to relate, in that ecstatic moment no thought of Billy Geary marred the perfect serenity of what promised to be the most perfectly serene night in history.

* * * * * * *

They were seated at the tiny tea table when the sound of feet crunching the little shell-paved path through the patio caused Webster and Dolores to turn their heads simultaneously. Coming toward them was an individual who wore upon a head of flaming red a disreputable, conical-crowned straw sombrero; a soiled cotton camisa with the tails flowing free of his equally soiled khaki trousers, and sandals of the kind known as alpargates—made from the tough fibre of a plant of the cactus family and worn only by the very lowliest peons—completed his singular attire.

"One of Billy's friends and another reason why he has no social standing," Dolores whispered. "I believe he's going to speak to us."

Such evidently appeared to be the man's intention. He came to the edge of the veranda, swept his ruin of a hat from his red head and bowed with Castilian expansiveness.

"Yer pardon, Miss, for appearin' before you."

She smiled her forgiveness to what Webster now perceived to be an alcoholic wreck. He was about to dismiss the fellow with scant ceremony, when Dolores, with that rich sense of almost masculine humor—a humor that was distinctly American—said sweetly:

"Mr. Webster, shake hands with Don Juan Cafetero, bon vivant and man about town. Don Juan, permit me to present Mr. Webster, from somewhere in the United States. Mr. Webster is a mining partner of our mutual friend Mr. William Geary."

A long, sad descent into the Pit had, however, imbued Don Juan with a sense of his degradation; he was in the presence of a superior, and he acknowledged the introduction with a respectful inclination of his head.

"'Tis you I've called to see, Misther Webster, sor," he explained.

"Very well, old-timer. In what way can I be of service to you?"

"'Tis the other way around, sor, if ye plaze, an' for that same there's no charrge, seein' ye're the partner, av that fine, kind gintleman, Misther Geary. Did ye, whilst in New Orleans, have d'alings wit' a short, shtout spiggoty wit' a puckered scar undher his right eye?"

John Stuart Webster suddenly sat up straight and gazed upon the lost son of Erin with grave interest. "Yes," he replied, "I seem to recall such a man."

"'Tis none av me business, sor, but would ye mind tellin' me just what ye did to that spiggoty?"

"Why, to begin, last Sunday morning I interrupted this pucker-eyed fellow and a pop eyed friend of his while engaged in an attempt to assassinate a white, inoffensive stranger. The following day, at the gangplank of the steamer, we met again; he poked his nose into my business, so I squeezed his nose until he cried; right before everybody I did it, Don Juan, and to add insult to injury, I plucked a few hairs from his rat's moustache—one hair per each pluck."

What's done as much as anything else to fill up the movie houses

LOOK at the crowds that step out of their cars in front of the movies every summer evening.

The movie managers would be renting half of their theatres for store space, if it weren't for the automobile.

II

It is typical of Americans that they took to the automobile as a matter of course—just as they have to the movies and to every other great invention of the last half century.

And the same thing has happened every time. Taking things as they come is a fine way to foster waste and extravagance.

As regards tires, the comeback is about due. People are pretty near through paying for something that isn't there when they look for it.

III

What a man pays for in a tire is quality—not a limited number of miles or the privilege of getting a rebate in case the miles don't come up to the limit.

U. S. Tires are guaranteed as to quality—with no limitation of mileage.

And that holds just as good for the small car tire as for the biggest U. S. Tire we've got. There's only one standard of quality with U. S.—and the size of the car has nothing whatever to do with it.

IV

We represent U. S. Tires in this town. You'll find it worth while to talk to us before you buy any more tires.

Select your tires according to the roads they have to travel:

In sandy or hilly country, wherever the going is apt to be heavy—The U. S. Nobby.

For ordinary country roads—The U. S. Chain of Usa.

For front wheels—The U. S. Plain.

For best results—everywhere—U. S. Royal Cords.

Alluring Midsummer Hats

WHEN your path leads past the milliner's show window, be sure you will linger in front of it—for that way temptation lies. Only midsummer could call forth such alluring headwear as that which causes the strongest minded among us to hesitate at the place where it is displayed, when we should be moving on. It appears that the very best things which the year has to offer have been saved for this particular time, and the chances are that some bit of irresistible art, in dress or sport hat, will part the unwary—but wise—onlooker from some of her money. The career of the midsummer hat is brief and glorious, and we might as well reckon with it, for it will reappear with early June.

Three of these adorable hats, shown in the group pictured here, will suggest appropriate styles for bridesmaids, or maids of honor. These midsummer hats are very often made of malines and hair braid, but sometimes of silk or straw braid or of georgette crepe and other sheer stuffs. One of the hats pictured is a twine-colored braid faced with pale rose georgette, and a wreath of roses and foliage trails about its course.

A lovely hat of black hair braid and malines might be made up in brown, or for a bridesmaid, in a light color. It has a scarf of malines, to be brought about the throat, and long-stemmed rosebuds falling from the back.

Another hat of hair braid with a crown of braid and malines, supports a wreath of mixed flowers, roses and lilies of the valley, that are as natural as life. This is very lovely in gray or brown, and is good in black. In light colors it is an ideal hat for the maid or matron of honor or for bridesmaids. There are many beautiful, light-colored braids among these glories of summer millinery, but it is, more than anything else, the charm of flower trimming that proves captivating.

Sweater an Absolute Necessity.

Summer sports and the vacation period make the sweater an absolute necessity and no amount of sport coats, no matter how attractive and smart they may be, can oust this very useful and becoming garment. At least a sweater may be becoming if it is well made. Many of them are hopelessly otherwise.

Silk Coats.

Silk coats, following the lines of the figure as well as to give the impression at first glance that they are dresses, are among the spring novelties.
